WASHINGTON, D.C. (July 31, 2018) – LIFT, a national nonprofit working with families to break the cycle of poverty, is pleased to announce the appointments of Arlene Ford, founder and CEO of the Equity Inquiry Project; Myra Jones-Taylor, chief policy officer at ZERO TO THREE; and Dele Oladapo, vice president & chief enterprise architect and technical innovation officer at Prudential to its national board of directors effective immediately.

“Arlene, Myra and Dele are preeminent leaders in their respective fields and we are thrilled to welcome them to the LIFT board of directors,” said Kirsten Lodal, LIFT’s founder and CEO. “As we mark our 20th anniversary in the year ahead and begin the work of planning for the next 20 years, we believe their strong experience, notably in equity and inclusion, early childhood policy, and building socially responsible businesses, will be extremely valuable as we expand our services and have even greater impact on the families we serve and the systems that hold them back.”

“We conducted an exhaustive search for new members who would further strengthen our board’s breadth and depth of talent, and we are delighted to have identified such outstanding individuals, all of whom have already been part of the LIFT family in various capacities,” said Steve Rotella, LIFT’s national board chair. “I’m confident Arlene, Myra and Dele are going to make an important and positive impact on the organization in this critical new leadership capacity.”

Arlene Ford, founder and CEO of Equity Inquiry Project

Arlene Ford is the founder and CEO of the Equity Inquiry Project Inc. (EquiP), a project aimed at promoting educational equity and success for all students. She also works to support equity within the nonprofit arena. Through EquiP, Arlene provides equity design consultations and related strategic planning. She facilitates equity, inclusion and diversity conversations and learning opportunities among education leaders, teachers and nonprofit organizations. Whether focusing on issues such as overall work or school culture, schools’ failure of students, or promoting effective discipline, she takes a systemic approach. Her work addresses change at the personal, interpersonal and organizational levels.
